

Richard Sylla

Richard Sylla is the Henry Kaufman professor of the history of financial institutions and markets and a professor of economics, entrepreneurship, and innovation at New York University Stern School of Business. He teaches courses in financial history, economic, and business history of the United States, and comparative enterprise systems.

Sylla has been with NYU Stern since 1990. His primary areas of research include historical studies of money, banking, and finance. He is the author of several books, including The American Capital Market and A History of Interest Rates. His writing has appeared in numerous publications, including the Journal of Economic History, Explorations in Economic History, Small Business and American Life: A History and Business and Economic History. He is also on the editorial board of many journals that include the Financial History Review, Enterprise and Society, and Economic and Financial History Abstracts. Sylla has also been the recipient of several awards and grants including National Science Foundation grants, an Alfred P. Sloan Foundation grant, and the Citibank Award for Excellence in Teaching at the Stern School. He served as president of the Economic History Association and the Business History Conference, and is currently a trustee of the Museum of American Finance. Prior to joining Stern, Sylla taught at North Carolina State and the University of Pennsylvania among others. Sylla received his BA from Harvard University before studying at the Indian Statistical Institute at Calcutta. He then received both his MA and PhD from Harvard University.