Matias Spektor

Matias Spektor is visiting fellow in the Latin America studies program at the Council on Foreign Relations (CFR). He coordinates the Center for International Studies at Fundação Getulio Vargas (FGV), where he is an assistant professor in international relations. His main current research projects are a history of emerging countries in international society and a study of U.S.-Brazil relations since the end of the Cold War.

Dr. Spektor also manages the one-year professional graduate degree in international relations at FGV and an oral history program on the foreign relations of Brazil since the end of the Cold War. Previously, he worked as an official for the United Nations and as a consultant for the Tavistock Institute in London.

He is managing editor with FGV Press for a new pocket series in international relations. His first book is entitled Henry Kissinger and Brazil (Zahar, 2009, in Portuguese,).

Dr. Spektor is a member of the Society for Historians of American Foreign Relations membership committee. He earned his doctorate from the University of Oxford in 2007.
