

Rami G. Khouri

Rami George Khouri is a Palestinian-American whose family resides in Beirut, Amman, and Nazareth. His last post in his 16 years at the American University of Beirut (AUB) was Director of Global Engagement. He was the founding director of the Issam Fares Institute for Public Policy and International Affairs (IFI) at AUB from 2006 to 2014 and is now a Distinguished Fellow at IFI. He also heads a research project at the AUB Libraries Archives to analyze the private papers of the late journalist Anthony Shadid, and Shadid's legacy for journalism and diplomacy today. His 50 years of journalism in the Arab region include writing books and an internationally syndicated column. He continues to author books and write analyses and op-eds for the international media.

Rami was executive editor of the Beirut Daily Star newspaper from 2003 to 2005, and before that had been editor-in-chief of the Jordan Times for seven years, when he also wrote for many years from Amman, Jordan for leading international publications, including the Financial Times, the Boston Globe, and the Washington Post.