

Adam Wolfensohn

Adam Wolfensohn is the Managing Partner of Encourage Capital. Encourage Capital works with major asset owners to design impact strategies and deploy investment capital to solve problems like global ecosystem decline, climate change, and bringing financial services to the world's poor. Previously, Adam was managing director at Wolfensohn Fund Management and also managed the Wolfensohn family office cleantech and environmental markets strategies.

He produced the climate change documentary Everything's Cool that debuted at the Sundance Film Festival in 2007. From 2002 to 2003, he worked with Conservation International to create a market for carbon credits from avoided deforestation projects.

Prior to 2002, Adam composed music for numerous films, television commercials, and theater productions, as founder and CEO of "Red Ramona," an award winning music and sound design studio in New York City. He is a trustee of Yad Hanadiv, Brooklyn Academy of Music, Urban Ocean Lab and Bang on a Can.

He is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations and the Investment Committee of the Rockefeller Brothers Fund. Adam earned a B.A. from Princeton University and a Master of Environmental Management from the Yale School of Forestry and Environmental Studies.
