

Lewis S. Alexander

Lewis S. Alexander is chief economic strategist at Rokos Capital Management. Previously, he was the head of fixed income research and chief U.S. economist at Nomura Securities International. Prior to joining Nomura in 2011, Alexander served as a counselor to Secretary of the Treasury Timothy Geithner, working on a range of domestic financial issues. He also led the initial effort to establish the Treasury Department's new Office of Financial Research (OFR) and served as chairman of OFR's Financial Research Advisory Committee from 2012 to 2018. Prior to that, Alexander worked for Citigroup, first as the head of emerging market economics and later as chief economist. Before joining Citigroup, he worked for ten years in the Division of International Finance of the Federal Reserve Board, lastly as deputy director. He previously served as chief economist of the U.S. Department of Commerce. Alexander is a member of the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago's Academic Advisory Council and has a PhD in economics from Yale University.